Last Night's Report.

From New-York.

NEW YORK, April 14.—The World has a special from Washington, which says that Secretary Seward is apparently much improved. Congress first took notice to-day from the rock just west of Lincoln, U. S. Grant, Secretary of War, and the same time received flowers from the southeast. The two Houses of Congress, with the Supreme Court, the Cabinet and Diplomatic Corps, then took the manner with most of the remained. A moment of silence was observed, when Dr. Lee sang a hymn. Then there was a long service from the Rev. Dr. Gurley, and Bishop Simpson pronounced the benediction. The procession moved down Pennsylvania avenue, with Gen. Grant and Meade's cavalry escort. The streets were filled with people, and the buildings were draped in mourning. At the head of the route sang and completing the funeral ceremonies. The procession then moved up the same way through and north Dorothy. Directly in front of the President's house the procession halted, and the remains were taken from the hearse, borne by sergeants to the entrance, and in the order of the procession, the body of the President was borne to the East Room, where it remained in state.

NATIONAL CALAMITY!

Assassination of President and Secretary of State!

Both Died this A. M.!

Details of the Sad Event!

Vice President Johnson Takes the Presidential Oath!

WASHINGTON, April 15—12:30 A. M.—To-night was shot in the theatre to-night by a partisan assassin.

SECOND DISPATCH.

President Lincoln was reported to live throughout the night. He was shot at 11.

THIRD DISPATCH.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—President Lincoln, who, with other friends, this evening, visited the Ford's Theatre, for the purpose of witnessing the performance of the play entitled "Our American Cousin," was assassinated in the course of the evening by a person who entered the box and approached him from behind, and who, after firing a pistol ball through the head of the President, inflicting a wound of which he died this morning at 7:22 o'clock, leaped upon the stage, brandishing a large dagger or knife, and made his escape in the rear of the theatre. The pistol ball entered the back of the President's head and penetrated the brain, ranging through the head. The wound is mortal. The President never spoke after receiving the shot, but expired without a struggle.

About the same hour that the President was shot, an assassin, whether the same or not, entered the house occupied by Secretary Seward, and, under a pretence of having a prescription, was shown to the Secretary's sick chamber. The assassin immediately rushed [illegible] to the bed of the Secretary, and, drawing a large knife, inflicted several wounds in the throat and face, and then escaped from the house. The Secretary was dangerously wounded, and it is feared will not recover.

Frederick Seward, his son, was also severely wounded in the head by the assassin, and is now in a critical condition.

The murderer of the President was pursued to the theatre by a man named Rathbone, who was in the box with the President, and who, when the assassin turned to leave the box, grappled with him, but was stabbed severely in the left arm by the assassin, who then escaped from the theatre.

The screams of Mrs. Lincoln first disclosed to the audience the fact that the President had been shot, when all present rose to their feet, rushing towards the box, and filling the theatre with confusion.

The excitement was of the wildest possible description, and of course there was an utter impossibility of theatrical performances—the audience, for the most part, leaving the house, when cries were heard, "Stand back and let the man pass," and the assassin appeared. On a hasty examination, it was found that the President was shot through the left temple behind and back of the temporal bone, and that the wound was probably mortal. He was removed to a private house opposite the theatre and the Surgeon General of the Army and other surgeons were sent for to attend to his condition.

Upon the examination of the private box, blood was discovered on the back of the cushioned chair occupied by the President, and his person being sitting, also on the partition, and on the floor. A common single-shot pistol of the derringer pattern was found on the carpet.

A military guard was placed in front of the house where the body of the President has been conveyed. An immense crowd was in front of the house, and the wildest excitement prevailed. The military were under the command of the President.

It had been previously announced that the President and his wife would visit the theatre this evening, for the purpose of witnessing the performance.

At the Cabinet meeting, at which General Grant was present, the subject of how to punish the enemy, and the prospect of a speedy peace was discussed. The President was in very cheerful spirits, and remarked that the fatality of Gen. Lee and others of the Confederacy, and of the Confederacy itself, was apparent in Virginia.

All the members of the Cabinet, except Mr. Seward, are now in attendance upon the President. Mr. Seward is confined to his bed, and Frederick were both unconscious.

E. M. STANTON, Sec. of War.

STILL LATER.

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, April 15th, 4:30 A. M.

To General Dix—The President continues to sink slowly.

Secretary Seward remains without change.

Frederick Seward's skull is fractured in two places, besides a severe cut in the face.

The President is still alive, but hopeless.

Maj. Seward's wounds not dangerous.

It is now ascertained that the assassin's accomplice that two assassins were engaged in the crime, Wilkes Booth being the one that shot the President and Payne, the second murderer, whose name is unknown, but whose description is so clear that he can hardly escape.

It appears from a letter found in Booth's trunk, that the murder was planned before the 4th of March, but not thought then immediately practicable.

Secretary Seward's condition is very critical, and hardly possible of recovery. Major Seward is now about 10 o'clock, or shortly before that hour. It would seem that they had for several days been seeking for a chance to get into the President's box, as the door was not carried into effect until last night. One of them has evidently been in the habit of visiting the theatre, as he was well known to the doorkeeper, and, not being suspected, was admitted without question.

The murderer of the President was pursued from the theatre by Major Rathbone, who was in the box at the time, and who received a severe stab in the left arm from the assassin, who, however, succeeded in making his escape.

The murderer of Secretary Seward forced his way into the house, under the pretense of being a messenger with medicine from the physician, and, on reaching the second story, rushed into the room where Mr. Seward was lying, and, without speaking a word, stabbed him in the throat, cutting the jugular vein. Major Seward, who was lying in bed in the same room, and his brother, Frederick, who was sleeping in the room adjoining, were severely wounded in the head by the assassin, who then rushed out of the house, mounted his horse, which was in front, and rode off before he could be arrested.

The murderer of Secretary Seward is described as a man about 5 ft. 8 in. high, and heavily built, with black hair and a heavy black beard.

The murderer of the President is described as a man about 5 ft. 8 in. high, with black hair, and wearing a heavy black moustache.

The murderer of the President was pursued from the theatre by Major Rathbone,

DEATH OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Reception of the News—Meeting of Merchants—Meeting of Workmen.

The assassination of President Lincoln and Secretary Seward produced a profound sensation and horror in this city—a sensation that persons could be found as little to express sorrow at the commission of the crime, as of an act of treason against the country, at the probability only of the death, could compel the first work of the traitorous villains engaged in the murder of Mr. Lincoln. Had not the report been signed by the Secretary of War, it would have been discredited.

About 8 o'clock the report reached here that Mr. Lincoln was dead, and soon filled every hotel, every one supposed to be loyal had the sad intelligence. The flags of all the steamers were in motion. The flags were hung at half-mast soon closed; the flags were hung at half-mast and draped in mourning; the bells were tolled; the stores were closed in respect, the whole city was in mourning.

Soon after the announcement by telegraph of the death of the President, Mayor Dunn issued the following call for a PUBLIC MEETING.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, TOLEDO, April 15, 1865.

To the Citizens of Toledo:

The President of the United States is dead. The particulars are known to the people.

Such a tragic occurrence has never before happened in our country. Aside from the enhanced services of the President to the nation, which have greatly endeared him to the people, his death at this time is a national calamity.

I respectfully ask our citizens to close all places of business immediately, and to meet en masse at White's Hall at 10 o'clock A. M. to-day.

D. P. DUNN, Mayor.

In accordance with the above request at the hour designated, White's Hall was filled, and the great was the crowd that the stairway leading to the hall was full, and so was the street in front of the building, there was a large concourse.

Major Dunn called the meeting to order, and after stating briefly the cause of the meeting, remarked that it had been suggested that he should call upon some clergyman to open the meeting with prayer. Rev. Mr. Cobb was called upon, and offered a most appropriate prayer.

Major Dunn then read the following resolutions:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God, in the dispensation of His providence, to remove from the earth our beloved President, Abraham Lincoln, and

WHEREAS, The nation has been deprived of his services, at a most critical period, when the rebellion is about to be crushed, and the people are rejoicing in the prospect of peace, and

WHEREAS, The people of Toledo, in common with the people of the whole nation, have learned with profound sorrow and indignation of the assassination of the President, and the attempted assassination of the Secretary of State, and

WHEREAS, We deem it proper to express our sympathy with the bereaved families of the President and Secretary of State, and our abhorrence of the crime which has deprived the nation of the services of the President, and attempted the life of the Secretary of State, therefore,

Resolved, That we tender our sympathy to

"THINGS I LIKE to See in Church"

The sheep in the caption of an article in the Boston Herald's Gazette from the pen of "Jenny," formerly editor of that journal. He details his "likes" as follows:

1. I like to see people go to sleep during sermon time, because it always arouses in every quiet congregation, as well as the probably very good, hearty breakfast before coming to Church. Books showing that the sermon is to be the thinker, showing that it is to be the sleeper, because he doesn't need any watch, or anything to prevent sleeping.

2. I like very much to see ladies congregate in the vestibule of the church and in the vestibule passages leading to it, and spend considerable time in visiting, conversation, hand-shaking, &c., while the rest of the audience are in the church waiting for the services to begin. It is trying to a delicate organization, like that of the ladies' welfare, besides a great inducement to those who may be accustomed to return to their homes that they should do so as soon as the sermon and the services which compose with the sanctity of the place and the holy character of the day.

3. I delight to see gentlemen fall asleep in the middle of the sermon. They have a right to, as it proves their independence of thought, and claims to American citizenship, and renders them a responsible man in both Church and State.

4. I request to be another class of individuals that I like to see in Church, and that is those people filled with the Spirit of Christianity, who are always ready to speak out loud, and in meeting, whether they have anything to say or not, for the benefit of others.

5. I like to see the minister read his sermon, so he definitely heed all over the house—that is, such readers as are capable of doing it, for the little puny mortuaries would scarcely be heard by any one, and are not to be blamed for the ability of their Creator not having been shaped, and for the clergymen selected by them to preach their sermons. Such preachers as these also serve as a kind of guide board to point us to the right direction, and contain the parental instructions they have received at home.

The Church of Christ.

The church of Christ was designed to rep resent him on earth, and in accordance to all the means and facilities which he has given them, to set them when sin seeks out processes of evil, and to bring them to the knowledge and blessings; when she ceases to do this her forms and mission stations are void. She must purge her way from the allegiance and counsels of the city, and by the broken staff—cross, and her love—cease to be a mother and a nurse. She must go down into the pit with the sinner, and walk with the saint, and be with him in the prison, and in the palace, and in the mechanic, into the factory, with the student, into the school, and the counting room with the rose in her cheek. Like the sun, she must extend her equally on all the surfaces of society; like the sun, flow out upon the whole mass of the race of humanity; and like the sun, shine on all through the changing seasons of the year and of life. She was organized, commissioned, and endowed for the purest restoration of the world.—Bishop Simpson.
